Claim Taft's Labeling Order Is Not Strict Enough. It was announced yesterday that Presi

dent Taft's whisky labeling order, which reversed the Roosevelt-Wiley ruling, will be carried to the United States Supreme Court by the straight goods distillers who claim that it is not strict enough to meet the full terms of the pure food law. Ex-United States Senator John C. Spooner and former Secretary of the Treasury John G. Carisle will make the ontests. This action will be taken after Sec retaries MacVeagh, Wilson, and Nagle announce the new regulations under the Taft decision. These regulations, it was said yesterday, will probably be promulday evening at an open meeting of the gated before the end of the week. The delay in the issuance of the new regulations under the internal revenue and pure food laws, as directed in the President's order of December 27, is ascribed to the temporary illness of Secretary MacVeagh and certain technical perplexities which are said to confront the three Secre taries. The regulations now in effect under the Roosevelt-Wiley interpretation require the words "imitation whisky" on mixtures of neutral spirits colored with caramel. President Taft's opinion dismisses the word "imitation," and prescribes that such an article shall be called "whisky made from neutral spirits."
